

The Wolf inside of me

Written by Morgan Clough
Thursday, 06 June 2013 14:30 -

I was in a training conference this week and the analogy was made about a wolf and it so described me that I had to share it....

A wolf is fed nothing but grain from the time of birth, would have wolf's teeth, but it would more resemble a docile domesticated dog. It would be very passive, non-aggressive obedient dog.

BUT, Once that wolf has tasted the blood-soaked meat it no longer resembles a dog, but that taste of blood turns it into a ferocious, muscle-packed aggressive, fighting machine....

Alot of analogies are in the bible about wolves vs sheep but here is a different twist.....Are you a grain-fed christian, do you sit passively in church every week, throw a few dollars in the plate sing a song or two and that's it.....

OR Have you tasted the bloody red meat of leading someone to JESUS and you no longer are capable of accepting plain old ordinary church anymore and you are desiring and dreaming about more meat....more christians making more disciples, it becomes your passion your fuel, your muscles bulging as you hunt the lost and hurting?

I am personally a blood-thirsty hungry wolf....and I am about to set out on a course to develop other blood-thirsty devouring wolves who will run in a pack and feed on lost & hurting people and thrive on seeing disciples make disciples.

WHOSE with me?